OPEN MEDIA FOUNDATION INTERNSHIPS, MORE THAN JUST EXPERIENCE.
INTERNSHIP SPOTLIGHT: MICHAEL BLISS

(Denver, CO) December 2014, The Open Media Foundation (OMF), as well as it's subsidiary Denver Open Media, are Denver nonprofits working to ensure community engagement in media. They currently offer a large variety of internship and volunteer opportunities that translate to more than just practical experience for many of those that participate. Michael Bliss, a video production intern, is one of these.

Recently completing a video production internship with Denver Open Media , Bliss reflects on what opportunities have become available to him by utilizing the skills learned through his internship with OMF.

"I now work full-time with a company that shoots commercials from around the world. I have my own production company and work with three other production companies in Denver. I have worked with todays hottest directors such as Robert Rodriquez, Quentin Tarantino, and Richard Linklater."

It's clear that the experience that many receive through internships at OMF is a valuable resource for other aspirational projects as well. Bliss elaborates on future ambitions: "With the experience I have gained from Denver Open Media I plan on doing a Television series called "Best Buds". Take Jay and Silent Bob meets Cheech and Chong with food and conspiracy. And a live show about the Denver Film Community."
