Did you miss the "Keeping it Local: Representation in Colorado Journalism" event?

This town hall explores representation in Colorado in journalism. Journalists and the stories they write should reflect and reach the communities they cover—unfortunately, this is often not the case.

This town hall takes a look at the statistics in your city and/or state and explore the disparities in representation: How many BIPOC journalists report for your local newspaper? How many women work at your local radio station? Are there people with disabilities reporting on your nightly news?

This discussion illuminates the importance of having a diversity of reporters covering state level and federal activity as a way to foster trust, transparency, and government accountability. Also discussed are legislative solutions to disappearing news deserts and ways to increase circulation and accessibility to credible news sources.

DOM Radio is Looking for Interns!

We are looking for passionate interns for Denver Open Media Radio.

This position is for someone with an interest in learning the inner workings of a FM radio station, including learning how to program on a broadcast server, and schedule radio content for DOM 92.9 FM / 89.3 HD3. Radio interns will work with the Station Director to provide member services including converting audio files for radio, scheduling content for air, supporting members, making sure content is FCC compliant, and going through DOM archives to identify and convert appropriate content for radio.

Colorado Is Now In Session

The Colorado State Legislature was the first government to join Open.Media and utilize our government SaaS transparency tools. Both the House and the Senate livestream all sessions, allowing anybody in the world to watch live debates on current legislation.

Past sessions are archived and available on the Colorado Channel, along with transcriptions and keyword searches.
